

Community Structure and Political Development

By Jai Ram Prasad

Mittal Publications, New Delhi, 1995. N.A. Book Condition: New. X+199pp The book is an attempt to crystallize the relationship between community structure and political development. Theoretical perspective of crisis, community and political development has been developed in order to resolve one of the basic dilemmas in theorising about political development. The study discusses the relationship between conflict and politics. The conflict has generated a new confidence among the youngsters and weaker sections of the society. Another significant aspect which this study has taken to evaluate is the political consequences of educational development for community life. There has developed a serious crisis in the educational system in the India?s villages. The growing army of unemployed youth is a symptom of this crisis. Moreover, it is being concluded that the village Panchayat has succeeded in developing grassroot democracy in the country. But the Panchayat system has failed considerably to exploit local resources for economic development. The study tends to confirm that power structure have become decision-making structures. It discovers the causes of differential political participation in community life. Thus crisis is a significant reality emerging out of this study. The structure of the community is not in conformity with the many aspects...
